SUNDAY JANUARY 27, 1901.

KING EDWARD'S COURT

There is some speculation about the effect the change of the monarchy will have on society in England, and what the effect, if any it will have, by reflection upon society in general. There was a time when the morals of the court of a reigning monarch represented the morals of the nation of which it was a part. The time when the morals of a court represented the morals of the people has past, with many other attendants and influences of an imperial nature.

The moral sentiment of the world has undergone a very material change for the better since it was true that a barbarous court represented a barbarous people. It is also true that a very material change has been made in moral and religious sentiment since a absolute monarch largely represented a desolate people. The writer is not among those who believe there will be any lower standard in morals in England, or in any part of the empire, through means arising from a change from the Queen to Edward, her son, as reigning monarch.

The moral and religious convictions of the people of England and of the world are not rooted among them, or in stony places, to be choked, or to be overcome in their growth by adverse winds from an imperial court, or by scorching rays reflected from a desolate aristocracy. Those who fear a retrograde movement in morals have not fully considered the change the world has experienced in the last century.

Superior courts and aristocracy that surround them do not any more lead or direct the material affairs of men. Much less do they lead or direct them in matters of conscience. At the beginning of the twentieth century aristocracy and imperial courts bow to the will of the people, with a very bad grace it is admitted, but they do the work when it is required of them by the people as a matter of policy, to prevent the people's will from becoming a force to command obedience.

A nobler horizon; there is in the way of a more speedy advance to a higher civilization, and more extended rights to the people than there are at this time, in a novel of knowledge by the might of their strength. They are encouraged by power the effect of which upon them they continue to resist, through their timidity, or want of confidence in themselves, but the force they possess is recognized by the know of ones of the earth, and by them regarded in a manner that takes the form of outward appearance of a concession when a difference arises between them and the people.

There will be no occasion for fault-finding by the more reasonable among the people of England, or by the people of an enlightened world, about the course of Edward, King of England, as there is not a man in christendom who is better informed upon the power of the people of England, or of the demands they will make respecting his manner of life, than he is.

He is more democratic than he is generally known to be at his time in life it will be his purpose as he said when he took the oath of office to follow in the foot-steps of his mother.

Her foot prints were not of the sort when they were made to be closed from view, by the first sand storm that comes when she is gathered to her fathers. It should not be expected that the court of St James will be the same in all particulars when directed by King Edward as it was for almost forty years when directed by a widow in mourning. Neither the times nor the circumstances demand such a course by Edward.

Social life in a proper manner is required to improve its better part in our nature, it civilizes and enlightens while it furnishes the oil which makes the wheels of time run more smooth. It is in opposition to grooves and worn-out ideals when supported by sensible people and the more elevated there is in that class. The social plane in the standard which expresses the culture and purity there is in a community.

Is there any cause to prevent the social plane in the court of St James from expressing the moral and cultured there in a court society? There is no reason to prevent the highest enjoyment possible in those who visit the court when it is upon a plane moral in its nature.

Should it be that King Edward would permit his court to descend below the standard of morals practiced by the body of the people, he would not be slow in learning from them that the example of his court was poor.

10 lines and an improvement would be surpassed in an impressive way. While the people of England are a intense monarchists, they will not hesitate to remind their monarch that his life is not up to their ideals. But there will be no cause for fault-finding by reasonable people, and for that reason there is no cause to lose sleep over the future morals of the Court of St.
James.

Now a Dog Stopped a Dogfight.

On one of the most pleasant side streets of Cleveland live two dogs—a large, dignified hound and a saucy, small fox terrier. The two are the best of friends, and the big dog is always watching over the little one and doing his best to keep the pert fellow out of a fight. But the other day his watchfulness failed. Another terrier came and yelled defiance at the hound's comrade, and when the big dog arrived upon the scene it was to behold a frantic, tumbling, snapping heap, of which his favorite was part.

He seemed to consider the state of things, then gave a sign of patient dignity and began to walk around the combatants, keeping a critical eye on the struggle and evidently acting the part of umpire. His favorite was getting the worst of it, but he did not interfere. Maybe he thought the punishment of defeat was better than any he could bestow. He watched silently till all at once his friend gave a yell of real pain and trouble. Then suddenly the big dog awoke. With a bound he was beside the other two.
With one tap of his paw he sent the victor over into the dust, grabbed his favorite in his mouth as a cat grabs his kitten and made off to his own back yard.

During the next hour he licked, scolded and fondled the repentant terrier.
And now the two are more devoted than ever, though the little dog seems more meek and decidedly more obedient than of yore.—Cleveland Plain Dealer

A Faithful Dog.

Many hundred years ago there lived at Athens a dog whose faithfulness has caused him to be mentioned in history, and in the Grecian city his story is often repeated.

The dog guarded one of the heathen temples at Athens. One night a thief stole into this building and carried off some of the most valuable treasures.
The dog vainly barked his loudest to frighten the thief and to rouse the keepers as the man went off with the jewels. But the faithful dog did not mean to lose sight of the rascal, and all through the night he followed him.

By daybreak the poor animal had become very weary, but still he kept the robber in sight. The latter tried to feed him, and as he made friends with the passersby he took it from them instead. Whenever the thief stopped to rest the dog remained near him, and soon a report went through the country of the animal's strange behavior.

The keepers of the temple, hearing the story, went in search of the dog, and they found him still at the heels of the thief at a town called Crayon.
The robber was arrested, taken back to Athens and there punished. The judges were so pleased with the dog's sagacity and faithfulness that they ordered him to be fed every day for the rest of his life at the public expense.

Poisonous Effects of Weariness.

The eating of "high" game is undoubtedly intended with risks and the poisonous effects are probably due to the toxins produced in the earlier stages of the putrefactive process. The advantage, of course, of hanging game is that the flesh becomes tender and decidedly more digestible than when it is quite fresh. The ripening process however, may mean the elaboration of toxins.

It has been stated that the production of the characteristic flavors of game is related directly to the amount of sulphurated hydrogen or sulphur alcohol set free, but it is rather repulsive to think that the delicate flavor of game is dependent upon that invariable product of decomposition of rotten eggs—sulphurated hydrogen. The smell evolved during cooking of "high" game is even more disgusting.

Fresh game sometimes sets up mysterious poisonous symptoms which have been attributed to the fact of the game having been overhunted and fatigued. Fatigue products indeed have been separated from overhunted game which, when injected into a healthy animal, have produced marked poisonous effects. There is no doubt that fatigue products under certain circumstances are also elaborated in the human body and give rise to a species of self poisoning, characteristic symptoms of which are headache, stupor and gastritis and intestinal pains. The flesh of overdriven cattle may prove poisonous from the same cause.— Lancet.

Wide Trousers, Narrow Streets.

La Lucha de Havana in a long editorial "giving fits" to American visitors to Cuba generally comes out strong in defense of Cuban trousers and of the narrow streets of the Cuban capital. It says:

"One frequently hears Americans ridicule what they call 'Cuban trousers,' thereby betraying their own crass ignorance. For instance, one of the coolest materials for men to wear is alpaca. To make close fitting trousers of it or of any other thin material would prove disastrous; consequently in all tropical countries the loose trousers are worn and persons who visit Mexico, Central and South America or India grow rapidly accustomed to them.
Furthermore, the shape affected here so much is the height of fashion in France.

"Again, the statement is frequently made that the streets of Havana should be 'widened and made modern.' Gross ignorance is again displayed. All tropical cities are built with narrow streets, as that is the only way in which pedestrians can be given shade during part of the day. By stepping out on to the Prado at 2 p. m. from Obispo or Obrapia the difference in temperature on wide and narrow streets may be noted."

Harry Davis of the Model store carries a full and complete line of smokers' articles; also purses, bill books, combs, tooth brushes, hair brushes, toilet articles and notions of all kinds.

James Carroll and Alex Pringle, proprietors of the Soux, treat everybody alike. A pair of overalls gets as much consideration as a broadcloth coat, hence the popularity of their resort.

Time changes the year and style, but the quality of our goods and fife are still the best. Samples and self measuring blanks sent to any address upon application. Harry L. McDuffie, merchant tailor, Reno, Nev.

ATTORNEY
COPELANDDies by Drowning in a Ditch—Inquest Will Be Held Monday.

E. E. Copeland met tragic death at an early hour yesterday morning. His body was discovered in a ditch across the river by George Hubert about 15 minutes after nine o'clock.

The circumstances of his death, as nearly as can be determined, are as follows:

In company with one or two friends he had remained up town until two o'clock in the morning and had then made his way toward home, going through Chinatown and crossing the V & T. Railroad bridge. He evidently lost his bearings when he reached Mill street for he turned toward the Riverside hotel until he reached the Steinweisz residence. Then he walked along the fence toward the river, his footprints showing plainly in the snow.

When he reached the ditch he turned upstream. The bank is shelving and slippery. He made a misstep and fell into the water face downward. Judging from his foot prints and the position of his body, he probably never moved after striking the muddy bottom of the ditch.

The above deductions were arrived at by Constable Lueper and a JOURNAL reporter, who went carefully over the ground.

No money was found in the Attorney's pockets and his watch was missing, but people who saw him an hour before his death say that he had neither watch nor money at that time.

The body was taken to the morgue where Coroner Peers will hold an inquest Monday.

The deceased was an Attorney who was possessed of great skill, especially criminal matters. He practiced for several years in this city, coming from California where he had successful experience as District Attorney in Modoc County. He leaves a wife and two young children who have the sympathy of the entire community.

WEDEKIND,
A WINNER

The Suit Brought by Charles Bell Concludes Abruptly.

The suit brought by Charles Bell for an injunction to stop George Wedekind from extracting ore from his claim was tried yesterday in the district court.

Surveyor Mack was put on the stand as a witness for plaintiff and was searchingly examined, cross examined, re-direct examined and re-cross examined until the plaintiff of audience was so exhausted with the theory and practice of civil engineering that not one among them but now has the whole table of logarithms at his tongue's end.

But the trial, which threatened to consume weary but instructive weeks, was brought to a sudden halt by Judge Wren's offer to take His Honor and two surveyors into the mine and let them measure the disputed incline for themselves.

This was agreed to by counsel for the plaintiff, although they held out a while for the privilege of inspecting the mine themselves.

Judge Carter and Surveyors Stewart and Mack drove out to the mine and discovered that the most extended working is well within undisputed territory.

Counsel for the plaintiff agreed to drop the case and pay the costs. This leaves the old man and (as Mack termed them) the "three stalwart young fellows with six shooters" at liberty to dig out their fortunes in peace.

Splendid Rendition
of a Beautiful Play.

The James-Kidder troupe played to a crowded house last night. The bill was "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Both the star and leading lady have played before in Reno and gave such eminent satisfaction that people did not begrudge the price of admission.

The company numbers 41 people and includes such well known players as Jules Oakar, Ethel Browning, Ina Brooks, Jessie Merritt, Norman Hackett, Thor, Coffin Crooke, J. J. Ryan, W. Gross and Hale Hamilton.

A Serious Case of Smallpox Has Developed in This City.

A Worthy Pioneer of Washoe Answers the Last Roll Call.

A case of smallpox has developed in this city. Mrs. W. A. Hanna is the victim. Mrs. Hanna returned from Salt Lake City ten days ago. She doubtless was inoculated with the germs of the disease there, for smallpox is quite prevalent in Utah at present.

Several days ago she became ill and tell-tale spots began to appear, but the dread disease was not suspected. At an early hour yesterday Mrs. Hanna grew worse, and Dr. Bergstein was summoned from San Francisco. He arrived on the tier, and as soon as he saw the patient, sent word to Sheriff McInnis and Dr. P. T. Phillips, member of the State Board of Health.

Although it is a little late to be absolutely certain of confining the disease, a strict quarantine will be maintained.

Every precaution should be taken and medical attendance summoned at the appearance of anything like a symptom of this extremely contagious disease.

Smallpox is working its way westward. There is a case at Virginia. Eleven persons are ill with it at Wells, and it has made its appearance in several other portions of the State. Smallpox is not generally fatal, but it isn't the pleasantest thing in the world to have, and all due precautions should be taken.

LITTLE LOCAL
BREVITIES

Items of Street and Town too Brief for Separate Heads.

Dr. Redman has opened an office in the old Investment building.

Six cars of sheep and two cars of cattle were shipped from Reno yesterday.

Frank Savage is installing steam heat in the old mining building at the University.

The funeral of Hiram Millsap will take place from the Methodist church to-day at 2 o'clock.

Dr. Redman informs the JOURNAL that the Vulcan company will bring up their smelter in a few days, and that it will be in full blast before many weeks.

A Little Fun on the Nevada Circuit.

It is understood that Manager Piper has several superb attractions billed for McKissick's opera house. Modoc will probably play in Reno this season.

Various theories as to foul play or suicide have been advanced, but they are untenable. Death was undoubtedly accidental.

Stockholders Annual Meeting.
